GASTRONOMY & FOOD SERVICES

In the 16th century, François Rabelais created Gargantua, an earthy, gluttonous giant famous for his idleness and for his love of "eating well," an expression that encompasses the art of receiving guests and preparing a meal for them. French cuisine is both a historic practice and a tradition rooted in the art of "eating well." France views gastronomy as nothing short of a "national treasure."

By the Middle Ages, France's great cooks had defined the country's culinary landscape. Taillevent, whose name now graces a great Parisian restaurant, and Sidoine Benoît, who invented the recipe for Caen-style tripe, are just two of the fathers of French gastronomy. In the late 18th century, Antoine Parmentier promoted the culinary use of the potato and the art of making fine bread. Other figures who shaped France's great culinary reputation include: Alexandre Dumas (senior); Antoine Beauvilliers, the inventor of the restaurant and author of L'Art du Cuisinier (1814); Auguste Escoffier; and Joseph Favre (1849-1903), who authored the Dictionnaire Universel de la Cuisine in the 1880s and founded the Académie Culinaire de France in 1883. A beacon for the culinary elite, the Académie is the oldest association of chefs and pastry makers in the world.

Four categories of restaurants exist in France:

Fine dining, France's area of excellence. Fine restaurants offer customers high-quality cuisine, distinctive wines, a warm welcome, attentive service, and a comfortable ambiance;

Theme restaurants focus on a particular dimension of food, often a cultural one. Most have a highly distinctive logo.

Fast-food restaurants serve food for on- or off-premise consumption, served in disposable packaging (fries, hamburgers, pizza, sandwiches, desserts, etc.). This category also includes ice-cream parlors and tea rooms.

Institutional food service is common in three sectors: education (school/university cafeterias), health and social work (hospital cafeterias, retirement homes, and prisons/jails), and the workplace (public and private sector).

INTERNATIONAL

UNESCO placed the gastronomic meal of the French on the list of the intangible cultural heritage of humanity in 2010. French gastronomy is a cultural asset with great importance to "cultural identity, as well as to the safeguarding of cultural diversity and creativity of humanity."

Paul Bocuse, Michel Bras, Alain Ducasse, Éric Frechon, Pierre Gagnaire Alain Passard, Joël Robuchon, Guy Savoy, and Michel Troisgros are just a few chefs who have exported their French culinary expertise. Six are ranked among the world's top 10 chefs. These and other practitioners of the "taste professions" – chefs, cheese makers, bakers, pastry chefs (Pierre Hermé), and chocolatiers (Patrick Roger) – have carried abroad the singular French vision of terroir, taste, and luxury. The French culinary singularity is also sustained by the competition known as the Meilleur Ouvrier de France ("France's Best Practitioner"). The title of "best practitioner" is awarded in the fields of service, cooking, sommelier, cheese/dairy making, pastry making, and more.

Gastronomic and culinary criticism is a French invention that has garnered worldwide recognition. The discourse in French culinary guides can be as complex as art criticism or as simple as a descriptive list. In this respect, they mirror the restaurants they feature. Such guides include: Guide Bottin Gourmand, Guide Champérad, Guide Gault-Millau, Guide Fooding, Guide Hubert, Guide Rouge (or Guide Michelin). The 8th edition of the Michelin guide to Tokyo, the city with the most Michelin stars, features 551 restaurants, 226 of which have stars (12 with three stars and 52 with two stars).

France boasts nearly 1,000 different varieties of cheese, 43 of which have the PDO label (protected designation of origin), including: Brocciu (Corsica), Cantal (Auvergne), Cabécou (Périgord), Comté (Jura), Camembert (Normandy), Epoisses (Bourgogne), Munster (Alsace), Ossau-Iraty (Pyrenees), Reblochon (Savoy), and Roquefort (Aveyron).

Each September, the Fête de la Gastronomie is held in France and elsewhere in the world. In 2014, it included 9,000 events and 230 celebrations abroad. 1.8 million visitors attended and 280,000 professionals took part in the festivities.

SECONDARY LEVEL

Many entry-level degrees in the food service industry are earned at secondary hospitality schools and vocational schools (lycées professionnels) open to international students, such as the Lycée Auffray de Versailles (10% international students), the Lycée Hôtelier de Marseille, and the Lycée Paul Augier de Nice. Secondary degrees are also offered by cooking schools and specialized institutes, such as the Cordon Bleu, Ferrandi (or the French School of Culinary Arts), the Institut Paul Bocuse in Lyon, Alain Ducasse Education in Argenteuil, the École Lenôtre in Plaisir, the École Maxim's Internationale de Paris, the École de Savignac, the Bordeaux École Supérieure de la Table, or the Institut National de la Boulangerie et de la Pâtisserie in Rouen.

Certificat d'Aptitude Professionnelle (CAP) is a national diploma that marks the first step on the professional ladder. It is available in service fields (restaurant generalist, waiter, etc.) and in food preparation (butcher, baker, cook, pastry maker, etc.). The CAP is offered by 300 schools throughout France.

The Brevet d'Études Professionnelles (BEP) is a national diploma that serves as a professional qualification. It allows the recipient to pursue a professional baccalaureate. Two distinct tracks are available: hotel and restaurant trades and butchery-delicatessen. Some 150 schools throughout France offer the BEP.

The Mention Complémentaire (MC) is a diploma indicating that the recipient has obtained a specialized qualification. MC programs are open to holders of a first vocational credential, and sometimes a general credential. The degree can be earned in several service-oriented aspects of the restaurant business (reception coordinator, food preparation, bartending) as well as several culinary aspects (the art of light cooking, specialized baking, restaurant pastry chef, restaurant pastry chef, baking and pastry making, and wine service).

The Baccalauréat Professionnel, a national diploma, certifies that the recipient is qualified for highly skilled professional work. The degree is offered in three areas: butchery, delicatessen, and catering; baking and pastry making; and restaurant management.

The Brevet Professionnel (BP) follows the professional baccalaureate. It offers training for jobs in the creation and transformation of food products: bartender, butcher, baker, cook, etc. Graduates have completed at least 400 hours of training.

LICENCE LEVEL

PREPARATORY PROGRAM FOR THE BTS IN HOSPITALITY-FOOD SERVICES (HIGHER TECHNICAL CERTIFICATE) – L1

50 preparatory programs are offered by vocational secondary schools in as many French cities. This one-year program is required for students having earned a general secondary diploma or equivalent.
